“ Grandma Jablonski was a kind-hearted Grandmother that touched everyone she knew in such a loving way. Although she was loving, she was bold and would tell you the truth so that you may reach your full potential. This love to become better has always instilled a personal fundamental quality that I still possess and cherish today. Some of my favorite memories, like most, consisted of playing card games, critiquing how my bed was never made to the standards as Grandpa Tony's bed (that you can bounce a nickel off of, when he was in the service), walking backfires, arts and crafts, folding laundry :/, and most important, instilling the quality of always to help my family, especially my Mother and Father. Again, qualities that I hold dear and that I will never forget to acknowledge everyday.

One of my favorite memories was when she was visiting us out in California and of course, it happened in the kitchen. I always thought that family is defined by food and cooking Perogies always identified me with my past..it has a certain heart. I would always watch to see how critical she would cook, looking at her process of making the dough, the ingredients in the filling, and how everything would have to be perfect in order to fry the dumplings. I knew this intensity was not necessary (seeing I have only had her Perogies and I know no different) but it always showed me... If I am going to do something, you better put your heart into it and do it to the best of your ability. As she sees me standing and staring at her passion, she looks at me and says, Hey Malushki! What are you doing looking at me for? ROLL THAT DOUGH.! As I laughed, I knew there could be always room for humor.

We will never forget you Grandma J, we will remember your lessons and try to always live to the best of our ability by them.
