“ I'll remember Angie kneeling on her living room floor surrounded by tile and concrete mix as she created a mosaic of wine bottles and grapes. It was a piece that a married couple had commissioned her to make, and she executed it beautifully.

I'll never forget how excited we were to go get our "hair did" together and we both received terrible haircuts and she was laughing because I was crying, and that made me laugh too.

She introduced me to the music of the Detroit Cobras and I showed her the magic of silver eyeshadow paired with winged eyeliner.

We'd order extra olives with our bloody mary's.

Angie was beautiful and complicated, but it was that authenticity that people loved about her. She never tried to conform to anything, she was 100% her own woman.

I'll always remember our fun times and Angie will forever hold a place in my heart, always loved.
