“ My memory of Burt takes me back to the early 70's when I began my 30-yr. career at Detroit Diesel. I was recently promoted to Supervisor of Tool Stores and responsible for ordering and maintaining the tooling for Machining operations. Burt, at that time, was a foreman known for his "no nonsense" approach to achieving strict standards, doing whatever was necessary to meet production schedules- one of the reasons he was well-respected throughout Machining operations and promoted to higher levels of Management. I moved on as well, but just being exposed to men of tenacity and leadership, like Burt, made me a better employe as well. I must admit, those few times we had a tool problem in Burt's machining line, made for some "interesting" conversations, not to mention "scrambling" on my part to get the tools Burt needed to meet his production schedule. In his own way, he was not only a leader in production, but provided valuable "training" to those "new on the block" folks, like myself at the time, trying to climb that corporate ladder. Knowing Burt and benefiting from his experience helped many of us enjoy long successful careers. Thanks Burt and rest in peace.
Our heartfelt condolences to the entire Mayotte family.
