“ I first met Dave when worked together at the Bonanza Steak House in the Fairlane Mall. Starting out as a dishwasher he was almost immediately given the nickname of Donny due to his flowing locks, ever present brush in his pocket and resemblance to the teen heartthrob- Donny Osmond. We spent much time together hanging out with co workers after long hot sweaty days slinging steaks and mopping floors. We hit the goldmine for a while when we found a party store near Warren and Evergreen where we could buy beer with our fake IDs We both progressed thru the ranks and became managers of the restaurant which started Dave to continue is career in the business.

We eventually became roommates and lived in a two bedroom apartment in Westland. It was a convenient arrangement as I worked days and Dave worked nights so we didn't cramp each others style. My favorite memory however was when Dave came home from his job at Domino's late one night with a pizza. He tossed the pizza in oven to warm up and promptly fell asleep on the couch. He awoke to the smoke alarm going off and dashed to the speaker on the wall and pushed the button to find out who was buzzing us to get in at 3:00AM ignoring the smoke filled apartment in the process.

After standing up in my weeding in 1992, although we drifted apart a bit over the years, we continued to endure every Lions home game together as season ticket holders for the last 15 years or so, We are now hoping that Dave will be able to pull some strings upstairs for us to send the Lions to the Super Bowl. (or at the least win a playoff game)

We shared many fun times over the years and Dave will be missed!
