“ Felix was a great friend, mentor, and all around great human being. He and I shared stories from our lives and I hope that we taught each other something. I "inherited" his friendship when I married Vicki Shy, the daughter of his good friends Jack and Lillian Shy. I taught me how to build, repair and restore stained glass; many of those techniques I still use today. He was a old soul, before he was an old soul, and a real class act.

I cherish the time I spent with him in his home workshop as well as the occasions when I lectured on Detroit architecture for the Henry Ford Trade School Alumni Assoc and the Optimist Club.

Felix, thank you for your friendship, assistance, guidance, advice, and most importantly your humanity. The world is just a little bit dimmer without you in it.

Rest easy. Semper Fi.

“ Felix was my Dad's close friend and my husband and I became friends of Felix's after my dad's passing. Felix was generous, kind, elegant, intelligent and accomplished. As I write this tears well up in my eyes that we have lost him and his energy in this world that so lacks greatness and true leadership. That is what Felix was to me and my husband, this constant beacon of what it truly means to be a man and a human being in this world. His robustness up until the last five years of his life were something to be envied. But, it was his kindness, intelligence, generosity and his always looking on the positive side of things (while being realistic) that were his hallmarks.

I cried for a good while when I learned the news of his passing. But, they were selfish tears as I am happy for Felix that he is free again and in the company of his beloved wife, Betty, and all his family members and friends like my mom and dad who have preceded him. The smile of this picture says it all, he was a teacher at heart (even though he owned his own business), he was a teacher in the Marines, at the Ford Trade School, as a business owner, as a craftsman and artist and mostly as a human being.

It is funny but today I turned my calendar and the saying for the day was "you must do things that you think you cannot do". I think that was Felix sending me a final message as when I think of those words and the can do spirit and the whole-heartedness of embracing the unknown with gusto, it is him I will think of and look to for inspiration.

*Lovingly,
Vicki Shy-McGrail*

“ I got to know Felix while visiting a friend at the Regency in Canton back in 2015. Felix was his roommate. We struck up an awesome friendship. It was a joy spending time with him over the years. He was always smiling, cracking a joke or two and had a lot of interesting stories to share about his life. I will miss my dear friend Felix and I feel blessed and privileged to have had the pleasure to know him. My sincere condolences to the family.

“ Felix was a valued member of the Plymouth Optimist Club for over 34 years. Although he has not been able to participate in the club activities for some time, he made it a point to maintain his membership. His commitment made a positive difference to the youth and the Plymouth-Canton community. He will be missed.
