As an avid fan of the Brooklyn Dodgers, he would often skip school to see his favorite team. He majored in physics at Manhattan College earning his Bachelor of Science degree. “ As someone who’s father passed at a very young age, Jim welcomed me into his family whole heartedly when I married his daughter Patricia, his love of baseball was equally shared by us and we spent many summer days and evenings at Chicago Whitesox and of course his beloved Detroit tiger games. He loved to keep score and was very meticulous at it. He was the smartest man I ever met, and could make things, fix things and show you how to do it as well. I thought I new how to cook until I met Jim, he showed me that I really didn’t, and my cooking game has been vastly improved because of him! These are just a couple things that stand out for me, there were many many more. His impact on my life was vast, and it was a blessing to know him. He will be sorely missed.
