“ John was really a great guy, I volunteered with John at the Ann Arbor VA hospital, where we worked in the Community Living Center transporting Veterans to the assigned appointments for a long time, We later took another volunteer assignment at the information desk where we moved patients either by wheel chair or by golf carts. At lunch we usually walked to Gallup Park along the river. He was a great hiker.

John will be missed, He was a all around good guy, well liked by all and a great American that served his country in the United States Marine Corps.

“ I firmly feel that when someone you love and respect dies, you should try and celebrate their life somehow. Maybe with words, music, good deeds. John Sample was my uncle. He served his country in Vietnam, was married to Carol (my mom's sister) and raised 3 wonderful guys. Now for the cool part. Through the years and many visits I started to look forward to seeing him and enjoy the talks and laughs we shared. He was so good to my dad and mom, and my girls. During his visits he always engaged in some project that would better my parents' house (even though on vacation).I have missed the Sample holiday visits. Where I work we have this insanely stupid poster that touts "Change is good". I hate that poster. On my screen saver, back in the Windows 95 days; I typed in "Make a difference" to remind me. John made a difference in my life.

“ Over the years we enjoyed going out to dinner, seeing movies in the theater, and finding a good place to go for dessert after a movie with Carol and John.

Al and John worked together at Ford and even rode together for several years. He and John enjoyed going to White Castle for those "delicious" (John's words) gut-- bomb hamburgers. One year Al and John even took Carol and I there for a "romantic" Valentine's Day dinner - complete with table cloths, roses and sparkling champagne!

We really enjoyed the times we shared with them and had some meaningful discussions over movies and current events. We miss that very much. But above all, we will always carry wonderful and precious memories of our times together with both of them.

Rest in peace Dear Friend. We will miss you but never forget you.
