“ As a member of the Lieberman family, I witnessed the strong friendship that my parents Ron and Dollie had with Ray and Maggie. Friends for many years, my Mom and Maggie shared their love of quilting. The two couples traveled together with other seniors. They met up for local dinners, especially at their favorite restaurant: the Rusty Nail on Ford Rd. My parents have also passed, but the memories of their special times with Ray and Maggie are still very fresh in my memory. Please take comfort in the loving legacy that your parents/grandparents have established. They both were wonderful people. My Dad used to celebrate all kinds of events by taking our families out for ice cream. I hope you do that too. ❤️❤️❤️

“Grandma Maggie was a wonderful, kind, quiet person. Two things always struck me about Grams. First, she was a humble person. She was a talented artist who created hundreds (if not thousands!) of beautiful quilts of all different kinds, along with myriad other works of sewing and embroidery, many of which I have displayed in my home or use proudly. Her talents are palpable in all the works she created. She was also a voracious and accomplished reader with many notebooks filled with the hundreds (again, if not thousands!) of books she read. But would you ever hear her brag about these accomplishments? Never! She always downplayed the beauty of her creations or the talent and effort it took to make them. Her humility is a feature I would love to emulate in my own life.

Second, she had a unique view on the world. I was consistently surprised by perspectives she would share on whatever topic I chatted with her about. In almost every conversation, there was a point where I was struck by a comment that I never would have considered which helped me to look at the world a little differently. Underneath her unique perspective was a deep sense of honesty, another feature I admire greatly. In this context, she could be quite funny and cutting. My favorite example being a conversation we once had about basketball. We were talking about a Pistons game (back before they were at their nadir) and she was shocked that anyone could miss a free throw: "there is no one blocking them, what's stopping them from making every single one?" Good point, Grams.

She was always a lovely, calming presence; she will be greatly missed. Love you, Grams.

“ So sorry to hear about Maggie passing! Maggie’s Husband was my cousin.

I always enjoyed visiting the two of them.

Maggie was an amazing designer of quilting blankets. She made one for my Husband and myself.

Prayers Maggie
