“ When I was a little girl of 10 or 11, there was a new girl in my class. She saw that I was having troubles understanding the world of hair products, and suggested I try conditioner to free me from tangles.

I remember being struck by this very significantly. Being the youngest of 3 girls, no advice ever came to me in kind. Accepting help with things, was not something that came naturally to me, still doesn't. I'm always waiting for the joke at my expense.

Her name was Stacey, and for the next 3 or so years we were pretty much inseparable. I'm pretty sure that I can still recall that phone number. [The one I dialed so many times, that her dad scared the crap outta me by answering "James' Lumber" once.]

Her father, as it turned out, was the football coach. She didn't seem to know she could command respect of the "popular" sect. She was just kind, very kind.

She went to the other Catholic HS in the area, so we lost touch. We friended each other on FB years ago and chatted via messenger once or twice. She worked in my town, just on the west side. I lived and worked on the east of PLYMOUTH. It wasn't a jaunt. Sheer laziness at points, and then I got cancer. Someday.... There will always be time.

She apparently had epilepsy. I'll wager my mom knew and never told me. Mom was a nurse; she had to know just in case, which impresses upon me my parents' respect for other parents. I didn't know a seizure could be terminal, but this was, a few days ago, right before her birthday.

I'm often told how pretty my hair is. And, that usually has me think of her. Funny how one thread connects us forever. Just a kind comment in the cloak room that started me on a path of kind gestures, and friendships.

I'll see you again my friend. Krissie is up there; say hi to her too. For now, I thank you and send my love to all of yours.

“ Oh my sweet friend. Your death is a complete shock but your friendship will remain always. I have never met anyone like you. You encourage, uplift and believe in people. (all while looking fabulous, I might add!) Your love is genuine and heartfelt and I will miss sister. You are someone I look up to and admire in many ways. Until we meet again, TIKI Chicks Rule!

I served with Stacey on many occasions and I'm so very sad to hear of this but am comforted that she is with Jesus. Her love for God and others was displayed so brightly thru her. My thoughts and prayers go to the family and friends.
