“ I've been so hurt just knowing that you are gone man. I had just seen you not that long ago and little did I know it would be the last. You were an older brother to me Steve-O, what happened. Now your gone. You were the greasest friend and anyone would have been worthy to been yours at any point in life.

I remember when I first met Steve he offered me a cigarette and a beer. Next thing you know, not only did we become roommates, but close friends. I always took it in my best interest to talk to Steve even though we didn't get along at first. I just can't believe that he is gone.

Steve always remembered his friends birthdays. He may not had money, but it was always the thought that counted. When Steve moved to Detroit, I was worried. I cared too much about Steve but it didn't stop him from living his life how he felt he should have lived it. He used to always tell me, " You only get to live once and I'm doing me. "
